Insights

One company vision with sub-brands tied to products with a lot of weight in each region.

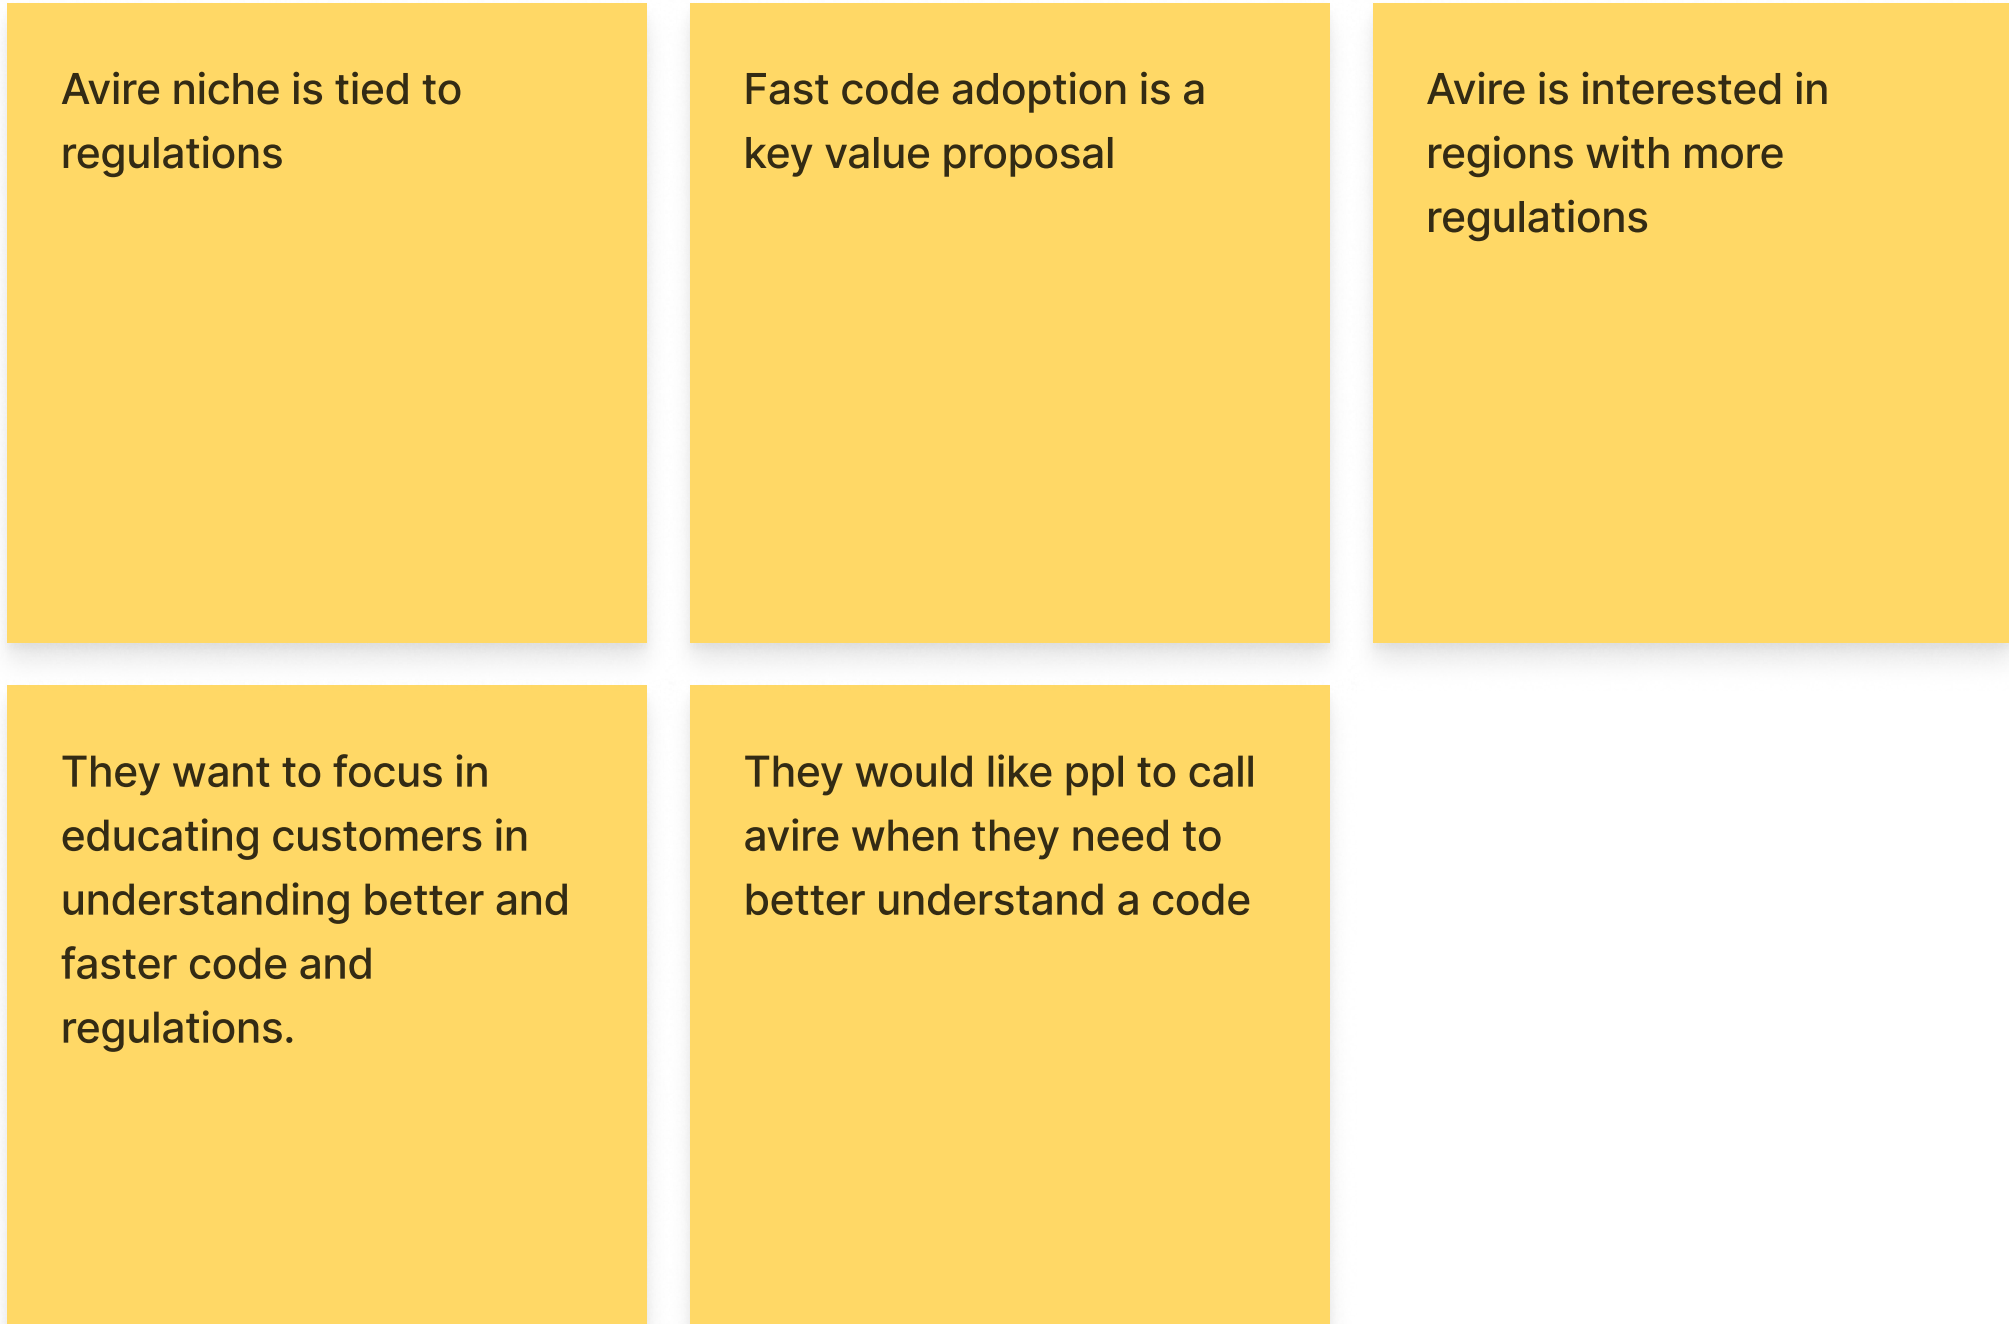

Its likely that new acquisitions will happen and the web should be prepared for this.

There are going to be more acquisitions.

In the next two years we will make more acquisitions

Avire wants to be positioned as a standars and regulations expert.

Currently Avire sells hardware solutions, in the future we want to focus also in digital and software solutions.

Hardware driven looking to sell also
software and monitoring

Now mainly hardware and they want to focus more
on software.
now 100% Hw
after 60% hw/40% sw
i.e. Monitoring phones
monitoring emergency button

Goal is to grow the digital
emergency phone system.
Customer base is used to the old analog product

There is a potential to develop lift monitoring

our strategy is to empower the digital system

Cloud monitoring system (real time health of the product)

Rebeca Cuerda

The lift safety B2B domain doesn't embrace change quickly.

None of the competitors do a good job. The category doesn't embrace change quickly. Best references are B2C from the category or B2B of other category.

There are two distinct persona categories: buyers and thought leaders. We want to engage thought leaders with content.

Avire has two interesting personas: The ones that purchase and the thought leaders

Customer education is one of the goals of the new website

We need to share this educational content about codes and standards this drives adoption of our products

Thought leaders:
We want the thought leader to use more the website

- They need to know about code and whats changing
- Lunch and learn: Continuous education programs

Buyers:
Customer who don't have big sales rep. and want to self serve. The website would serve them

Having local tech support is an important value to Avire customers local tech support by region is important for local engagement

Tech support is used almost exclusively by engineers. They want to know how to install and program the products.

Lift engineers are the main users of tech support. Usually product related support: Installations and programming

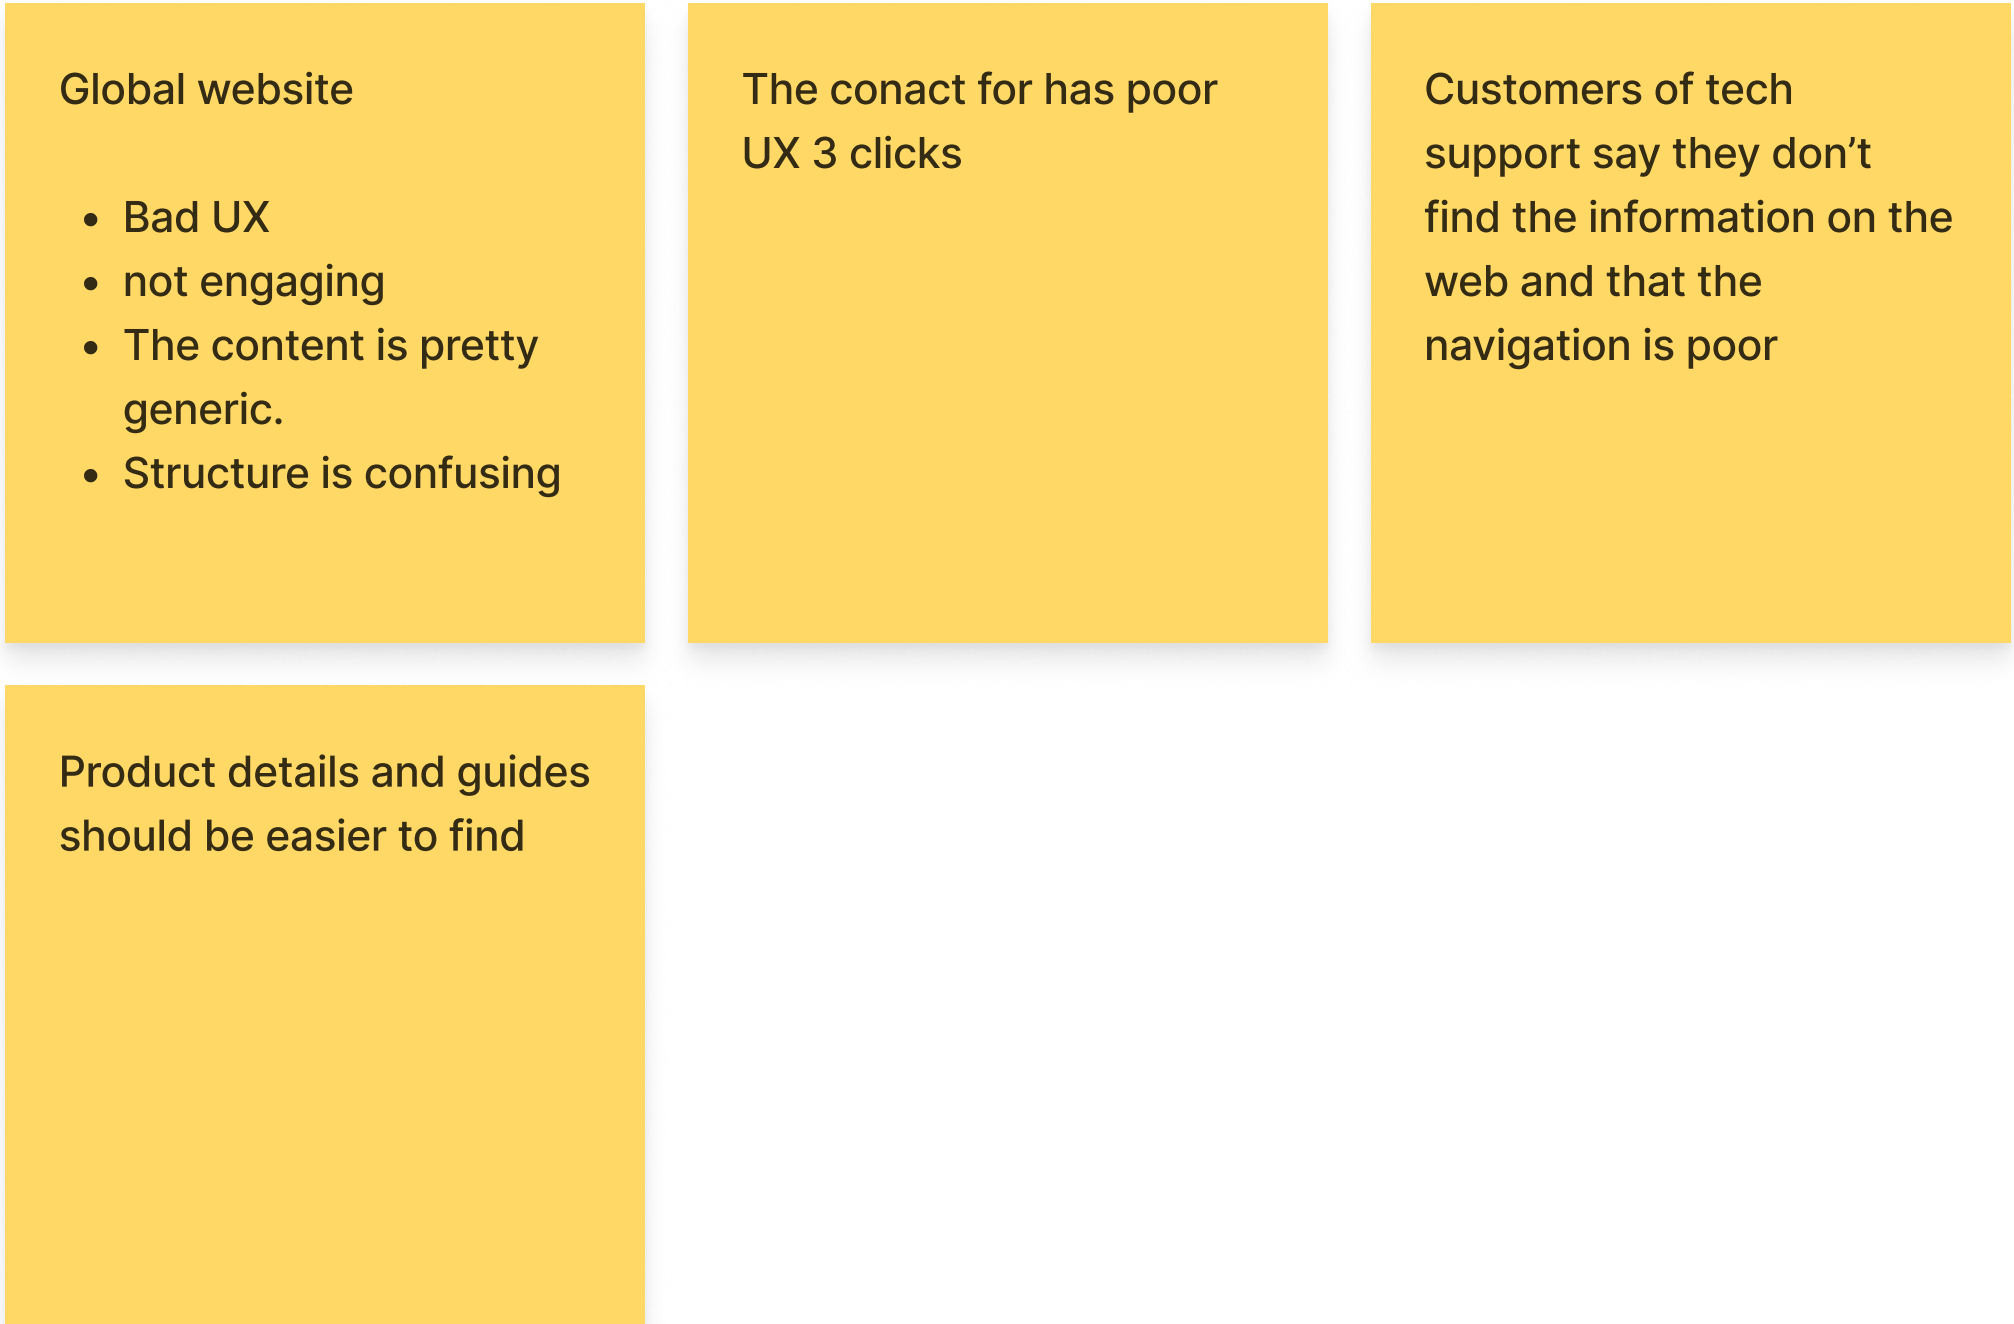

Many customers already know the people of tech support

Engineers don't like to read and prefer someone on the phone

Customers need

- Understand what the product is supposed to do
- Know how to install the product (Specially telephone equipment)
- They need to program a product correctly

Current website has poor navigation and UX in general.

More governance over content creation globally and locally is needed.

We need some governance

Wants to create more content:

More structure way to make content (blog) right now they don't do it too much.

They were translating the content directly to i.e. spain and this was not good

There is product information missing in the website.

Product information should be updated more quickly in the website

There is a lot of product documentation that is not available in the website and it should be

The current website is very product focus and it does not focus in other customer needs.

Is very product focused and doesn't deliver value to customers in other areas: standards and regulations education, integral lift solutions

Global site should be more focused in corporate information and not in products.

Global is more corporate and not product focus,
In global we can redirect
to distributors

The new website should give new tools to the marketing teams

Wants to have better tools for marketing, acquisition, retention of new customers

The digital switch is an example of a standard or change that they want to inform consumers about

They want to have flexibility to be able to create this content

Brand strategy summary

Brand strategy summary

- Avire will continue to acquire new brands so we will always have two competing products with different brands in the same region as a result of the acquisition.
- The strategy when Avire has more than one brand in a region is that each one of them will be focusing in a specific market.
- In the US, Rath will be life safety and Janus lift safety/emergency.
- The only products branded directly as Avire will be software.
- We can find the same product branded differently in other regions.
- The global region of the site should be corporate focused. We could even redirect customers to dealers when they look for products.
- The Avire brand should work as an internal tool to communicate the one company vision, externally to give stability and trust to the customers and also to compete with big brands when recruiting talent.
- In Asia sub-brands don't have the same weight as the ones in US and EU.

Thank you!

AVIRE
